Clare Padley, Laura Begley : Criminal Injuries Compensation Claims before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Criminal Injuries Compensation Claims:

Criminal Injuries Compensation Claims is a practical and comprehensive guide to making a claim under the government's 1996 and 2001 tariff based Schemes for compensating victims of violent crimes. Divided into three sections: eligibility issues, assessment of compensation, and the procedural aspects of the Schemes, this unique text provides a one-stop source of information for all those practising in this field. Key features include: - commentaries on all the recent judicial review decisions - detailed guidance on the approach of the Authority and the Panel to some of the more difficult issues of interpretation of the Schemes - specific guidance in relation to the calculation of an applicants' losses and sample schedules of loss - detailed summaries of relevant case law - practical advice about the preparation of claims, the obtaining of evidence and the presentation of claims - full text of each Scheme and key guides and practice directions published by the Authority and the Panel. Written by authors with unrivalled experience, Criminal Injuries Compensation Claims is essential reading for practitioners looking to improve their applicants' chances of receiving the appropriate compensation.

'This work is remarkable for its thorough treatment of the subject. This is an excellent, single-volume companion to practice in this challenging field.' New Law Journal About the Author Clare Padley and Laura Begley are barristers in the chambers of John Foy QC at 9 Gough Square. They both have over 10 years' experience specialising in personal injury work including claims for criminal injuries compensation. They regularly appear before the Criminal Injuries Appeals Panel.
